Novels of Today

*A Series of Novels, English, American and Continental (in translation), linked together
by the common bond of Freshness, and Reality*

Novels of Today

THE new generation's outlook is different from its fathers'; it is bolder, simpler, more direct, not so over-awed by social conventions. It discusses the old problems and situations in a freer spirit with more detachment and more amusement.

There are, of course, writers of other generations who in subtle insight remain far ahead of this main body of progressive youth, and Mr. Cape's aim is to include in Novels of Today any piece of fiction by writers new or old, English, American or Continental (in translation), that is arresting, that makes one think, or is broadly human. Speaking generally, 'freshness and reality' is the note of Novels of Today.

A certain fall in the costs of production has made it possible to issue these books at the uniform price of SIX SHILLINGS net. They are uniformly bound in black cloth with green lettering and design.

The Age of Consent

EVELYN FANE

THE AGE OF CONSENT' introduces one along with the heroine PAMELA to a most difficult, perilous and exciting situation. The authoress has developed her drama with extraordinary boldness and frankness, and yet with extraordinary delicacy. The publisher claims that the novel is 'modern' in the fullest sense, and that Pamela's experiences with the man who persecutes her, the man who loves her, and with this world which makes a cause célèbre out of her story, will prove absorbing to modern men and women.

The Highbrows

C. E. M. JOAD

Novels of Today: 2

MR. JOAD'S satire is two-edged; not content with ridiculing the foibles of the Intelligentsia, he has carefully studied and subtly exaggerated the tendencies and mannerisms of the modern novel, the result being a burlesque of the numerous autobiographies by clever modern young men, who use the novel as a kind of shop window in which to advertise their adventures and emotions, and as a dustbin in which to shoot the refuse epigrams of their friends.

A French Girl in London

ADOLPHE ORNA

Novels of Today: 3

THE experience of this French girl in London, in the City, in Golders Green and in Surbiton is a page torn fresh from the life. Her portrait and those of the men who fall in love with her are typical of the conflict between French and British ideas. The novel will tell English people a great deal about London life, and a great deal, in the most piquant fashion, about the French woman.

People

PIERRE HAMP

Novels of Today: 4 'PEOPLE' is a collection of portraits and brief sketches. Silhouettes of princes in exile, big and little bourgeois employees, midnettes, poor folk, in revolt or discouraged, all are painted here with a free and sensitive hand. In these stories there is never a word too much, never any passage of extraneous moralizing, but simply sheer presentation of what goes on in the cellars of our social structure.

Helen

ALLAN MONKHOUSE

HOW a father loves and guards his daughter, how he watches her choosing between two men—neither of whom he would have chosen for her—how Helen marries, and what her marriage is, before and after the storm breaks on her household—this situation Mr. Allan Monkhouse unravels with fine art, in a most moving domestic drama.

The Woman & the Priest

GRAZIA DELEDDA

Novels of Today: 6

INTENSELY dramatic this story by the celebrated Italian authoress Deledda, which brings together three points of view, that of the priest who succumbs, of the woman who tempts and of the mother who watches her son's temptation. The descriptions of wild Sardinian life are done by the hand of a master who has known from childhood the life of the Sardinian people.
