Travels in Arabia Deserta By CHARLES MONTAGU DOUGHTY

A NEW and entirely unabridged Edition with illustrations, maps, plans, collotype plates, etc., as used in the original edition published by the Cambridge University Press in 1888. This reprint has been issued under the supervision of T. E. Lawrence, Fellow of All Souls, Oxford, who acted during the War as Chief Liaison Officer with the Emir Feisal on the Staff of Lord Allenby. The author has written a new Preface and Mr. Lawrence has added an Introduction.

Extract from the Introduction by T. E. Lawrence

THE more you learn of Arabia the more you find in "Arabia Deserta." The more you travel there the greater your respect for the insight, judgement and artistry of the author. We call the book "Doughty" pure and simple, for it is a classic. . . . It is the first and indispensable work upon the Arabs of the desert; and if it has not always been referred to, or enough read, that has been because it was excessively rare. Every student of Arabia wants a copy. However, there is no need at this time of day to commend Doughty to students. They all know of him. It is to the outside public, willing to read a great prose work, the record of the wanderings of an English poet for two years among the Beduins, that the present edition must make its appeal, and perhaps to them the verdict of present-day travellers in Arabia will have weight.

"Doughty's work is a treasure beyond price."—MORNING POST.

"Like hardly another reprint for a generation this new edition will come upon new readers like the raising of sunken treasure to make them rich."—OBSERVER.

"A book so faithful in its record and reproduction of the habits and customs of life and thought of a great race that it might have been written in the golden age of English literature and achievement."—TIMES.

¶ In two volumes, Demy octavo (8 $\frac{3}{4}$ by 5 $\frac{5}{8}$ ins.), Cloth, gilt top, gold lettering. £9 9s., postage 1s. 6d.

Russian Portraits By CLARE SHERIDAN

MRS. SHERIDAN accompanied M. Kameneff to Russia in September, 1920, in order to make busts of the chief Revolutionary Leaders. She succeeded in carrying out her project, and returned with the models of Lenin, Trotsky, Zinoviev, and Dzirjinsky in November, 1920. Her book is written from her diary, and is a volume of personalities, not politics. She gives vivid pen pictures of the principal figures in Russia to-day, and personal impressions of conditions in Moscow.

"It is a lively, graphic narrative."—TIMES LITERARY SUPPLEMENT.

"... the most vivacious account of Russia's despots that has yet appeared."—DAILY EXPRESS.

"... quite exceptional character and value."—FALL MALL AND GLOBE.

"... a most entertaining book."—EVENING STANDARD.

Prejudices (First Series) By H. L. MENCKEN

A COLLECTION of brief and penetrating essays by an author who has been described as the ablest American critic since Poe. While the subjects chosen deal chiefly with books and authors, the style and general treatment is fresh and informal. The subjects chosen range from "Arnold Bennett" to "The Genealogy of Etiquette," and from "The Late Mr. Wells" to "The Ulster Polonius."

¶ Crown octavo (7½ by 5 ins.) 7s. 6d., postage 9d.

This Simian World By CLARENCE DAY, JUN.

A SATIRE on Humanity. Mr. Day tries to imagine what the result would have been if other animals had had the same advantages as humans. If our anthropoid ancestors had remained mere brutes there might have been races of cat-men, elephant-men, or even ant-men—and in many ways the civilisation produced by them would have been at least not inferior to our own.

¶ Crown octavo (7½ by 5 ins.), with illustrations by the author.
5s., postage 9d.

Shadow and Sunlight By E. L. GRANT WATSON

A ROMANCE of the Tropics, by the author of "Where Bonds are Loosed" and "The Mainland." It is the story of an Englishman who for years has lived amongst the natives of the South Seas—and of the woman who later went out to him from England. Mr. Grant Watson, who has himself lived amongst the natives, and has closely studied their habits and beliefs, draws a vivid picture of the ensuing struggle between the "Magic" of the white woman and the "Magic" of the natives.

"... the steady development of the drama never fails to hold the reader."—TIMES LITERARY SUPPLEMENT.

"'Shadow and Sunlight' is really a very fine book."—MORNING POST.

¶ Crown octavo (7½ by 5 ins.) 7s. 6d., postage 9d.

The Brimming Cup By DOROTHY CANFIELD

MRS. FISHER (Dorothy Canfield) is already well known as the authoress of "The Bent Twig." In her new book she takes the old problem of the eternal triangle, the story of one woman and two men, and solves it in an entirely new and original way—by the daring application of common sense.

The book ends, therefore, not with pages of dramatic scenes, but with the calm reasonings of the woman whom her husband has left free to choose between himself and the other man.

¶ Crown octavo (7½ by 5 ins.) 8s. 6d., postage 9d.

Zell By HENRY AIKMAN

ZELL'S parents were divorced when he was only twelve years old. All his youth he suffered the humiliation of being the son of a disgraced father.

Twenty years later, when he himself is a father, but unhappily married and in love with another woman, he is faced with the problem of the choice between his own happiness and that of his son, for if he follows his natural inclinations he knows, from bitter experience, the tortures which he will necessarily inflict on his child.

¶ Crown octavo (7½ by 5 ins.) 8s. 6d., postage 9d.

Mitch Miller By EDGAR LEE MASTERS

IN "Mitch Miller," which has been justly described as "A Twentieth Century Tom Sawyer," scenes from a boy's life, humour and pathos are skilfully blended.

Mitch and his chum Skeeters believe in Tom Sawyer as a living person, and delight in every circumstance which enables them to compare their own lives with those of their hero and his friend Huckleberry Finn.

Many authors have been able to depict their fellow-men with success, but few can draw a boy who is neither sentimental nor "stagy." Mr. Masters has achieved his object without falling into either trap.

¶ Large Post octavo (8 by 5½ ins.) 8s. 6d., postage 9d.

Poor White By SHERWOOD ANDERSON

MR. ANDERSON has been fittingly called the "Arnold Bennett of America." The reasons are fully apparent in this book.

Hugh McVey is a dreamy, overgrown "poor white" boy who inherits from a drunken father an almost unconquerable lethargy. Receiving but a rough-and-ready education from the wife of a stationmaster, he drifts from pillar to post until suddenly, while acting as a telegraph operator, he discloses a latent genius for invention. As an inventor he becomes rich and famous. Then follows the story of his love, and once more everything seems to conspire against him. The country no longer has any use for him as an inventor, and he is cast aside and crushed by the very forces through which he has become famous.

¶ Crown octavo (7½ by 5 ins.) 8s. 6d., postage 9d.

The Flying Bo'sun By ARTHUR MASON

A SEA STORY told in a blunt, straightforward manner which rings true.

A "Flying Bo'sun"—a tropical bird—alights on the schooner Wampa. It is a bad omen and foreshadows the death of the Captain. There follow psychic occurrences, storms and excitements, mingled with vivid character-sketches which, being based on the author's own personal experience at sea, bear the stamp of actuality.

¶ Crown octavo (7½ by 5 ins.) 7s. 6d., postage 9d.

Madame Bovary By GUSTAVE FLAUBERT

Translated from the French by Eleanor Marx-Aveling

THIS book, which has been described as the foundation of all modern realistic novels, marked what was really the beginning of the revolt against the romanticists, both in France and in England. Emma Bovary is an impressionable country girl, brought up in drab, monotonous surroundings, who has filled her head with impossible dreams of romance culled from the popular novels of her day. Married to Bovary, a stupid middle-aged widower, she soon tires of him, and turns her attention first to a squire, who eludes her, and then to a young law-student.

With title-page in blue and black. Decorated paper boards, canvas back, paper label.

¶ Demy octavo (8½ by 5¾ ins.) 12s. 6d., postage 1s.

Mademoiselle de Maupin By THÉOPHILE GAUTIER

Translated from the French by Burton Rascoe

WRITTEN in eight weeks, "Mademoiselle de Maupin" is, nevertheless, the work upon which Gautier's fame rests.

Described as a "golden book," it is as close an approximation to painting as anything conveyed by words could be. The Preface, in which Gautier challenged the critics, was so thorough in its disposal of irrelevant ideas of criticism that it became the bible of those theories of art of which Gautier was the father.

With title-page in blue and black. Decorated paper boards, canvas back, paper label.

¶ Demy octavo (8½ by 5¾ ins.) 12s. 6d., postage 1s.
